Yes, it may be considered cuckoo to put a trail race within the city limits of Philadelphia. Certainly a place, where one may think a trail race does not belong, but you will be surprised how many gorgeous single track trails can be found at Pennypack Park.

The Sloppy Cuckoo is completely run off public roads within the gorgeous Pennypack Park. This year we also offer a Uber10K option, which serves as a perfect opportunity for road runners or new runners to explore the world of trail running.

Even so the course is considered not too technical, there will be rocks, roots, trees to climb over, creek crossings, horse poop, sand & if it rains the week before the race, certainly some mud. So leave your new white Nikes at home. You will be supported by 6 aid stations for the half, (2 for the 6.55, carry a bottle) , including the Oktoberfest aid station (unusual carbs and snacks served by the St. Pauli girls). Post race food will be provided by 2 professional chefs (Thekla Grund, former owner of the Old Brauhaus & Linda Weiss, reason #67 why Oprah's weight is yo-yoing, I did not make this up). This is our 6 year anniversary, we have put on more than 30 trail runs over the years, so we know how to setup a great trail course. "Uberhans" will be there also to entertain you with his accordion. Not fast enough to win an age group award, dress up. We will reward the best /funniest outfits (must be somewhat cuckoo) or find one of the hidden cuckoo eggs along the course to win cool prizes.
