"No need to run in Lederhosen to enjoy the German atmosphere at the post race party"

The cuckoo bird is known for laying its eggs in the nests of other birds. He doesn't even bother breeding its eggs. Is it just lazy, or is its own place too sloppy to raise little cuckoos? Well, we are somewhat imitating that behavior, by putting our trail race within the city limits of Philadelphia. Certainly a place, where one may think a trail ultra race does not belong.

The Sloppy Cuckoo 12 hour challenge takes place at Pennypack Park, a beautiful oasis within the city of Philadelphia. We designed a 6.55 Mile loop that is very run-able, incorporates gorgeous views of Pennypack creek, offers enough variety to keep you occupied all day, but it is easy enough to cover a long distance in one day.

This is a great format to see how far you can go. Did you ever cross a finish line and thought: “ I could run all day today”?

See how far you can go, or run a distance that you never conquered before because a time limit prevented you from doing so.
